tech sector... a combination of a strong U.K. university scene, the presence of DeepMind, swerving EU regulation, and having English as our national language will be more impactful than the vast majority of government intervention," said Benaich.

Read the full piece here.

AGENDA

STATE OF THE NATION: OpenUK holds its "State of the Open" event at King's College London on the Strand this afternoon, where it will be publishing its latest report examining the health of the U.K.'s open source community. Speakers include its chief executive Amanda Brock, computer scientist Neil Lawrence and author Will Hutton.

NOT STRICTLY TECH: The Institute for Government's webinar looking at "What happens on day one for a new government?" at 1 p.m. could be worth a watch for those seeking insight into what a new administration might wake up to on Friday.

AROUND THE WORLD